"When you say it with flowers, make them ours"

hansen brothers
florists

When you care enough to send flowers, choose them from Hansen Brothers Florists. A large staff, including four master designers, is on hand to help you with your selections for weddings, funerals, churches, banquets, meetings, parties, and other special occasions.

Hansen Brothers, an FTD florist, was acquired by Richard Sroczyński in 1970. A graduate of the Chicago Art Institute, Mr. Sroczyński has brought with him a wealth of modern, fresh ideas, which contribute to his popularity in the community.

At Hansen's you can choose flowers, plants, artificial flowers and arrangements, Mrs. Sittler's candies, import items, and gifts. A greenhouse—on the premises—assures you of fresh flowers at all times, and a delivery service speeds them on their way.

Hammond in Perspective

Standing high on the list of Hammond's attributes is its location, one of the most significant of the many factors that have shaped the city's growth and assured its continuing prosperity. Situated at the southwestern tip of Lake Michigan, Hammond is at the heart of the Calumet Region, one of the most remarkably productive industrial areas in the world. Among the many superlative achievements to which the region lays claim is that of being the nation's foremost producer of steel. Here also is the site of the world's largest complete oil refinery. With the Illinois-Indiana state line at its flank, Hammond is the center of a vast transportation network symbolized by the western terminus of the Indiana Toll Road; it has convenient access to the countless resources of Chicago and to the choice recreational areas of two states.

The City that Does it All

Large "open-walled" classrooms accommodate young students

Worship in the beautiful interior of St. Demetrios Greek Orthodox Church

The status quo never has been good enough for Hammond. From the start the city has shown a state of dynamic flux — growing, adapting, incorporating, constantly reshaping itself physically, socially, and economically to capitalize on its opportunities both natural and man-made. That dynamism today is more than ever in evidence; the city is poised, alert, and expectant. Past gains have been consolidated and more are in the offing. Hammond, in short, has a lot going for it.

It's a fine place to live, handy for its citizens to their economic wellsprings but removed from the urban crunch on one side and the milltown atmosphere on the other, with graceful residential areas that attract people from both. The forward-looking Park Board maintains over 1000 acres of recreational space within the city in 32 verdant retreats. A first-rate public-school system, fifth largest in Indiana, not only educates the young but does so through advanced innovative programs that set precedents applicable to public education on a national scale. At the Purdue University Calumet Campus, enrollment continues to set new records each year. An important force in retaining the community's youth, Purdue Calumet offers them the benefits of higher education right at home: associate, bachelor, and master's degrees.

The attitude toward new industry is one of warmth and cordiality. The same attitude, reinforced by the presence of ample vital resources and a favorable tax structure, creates a climate that encourages expansion of existing industry. Vigilant attention to zoning requirements assures the continued availability of choice industrial sites. The importance of such amenities to the city's prosperity is demonstrated by the presence of more than 200 companies, the diversity of which — they manufacture everything from soap to steel — has long since removed Hammond from dependency on a one-industry economy.

Culturally the city matures year by year, as witness the Art Center of the Northern Indiana Art Association, Inc.: a permanent home for fine arts in the heart of downtown. (It's also worth noting that the progressive Public Library, with the cooperation of NASA, placed the moon rocks on exhibit here before they were seen in Chicago.)

In recent times Hammond's residents have demonstrated specifically their appreciation of such facets of community life as fire protection, garbage collection, the quality and quantity of the water supply, the banking and shopping facilities and services, their public library, the quality of public education, and the friendliness of their neighbors.

In a figurative sense Hammond's loins are girded for a new cycle of growth and prosperity. The only thing the city doesn't promise is passivity. Here the status quo will never be good enough.

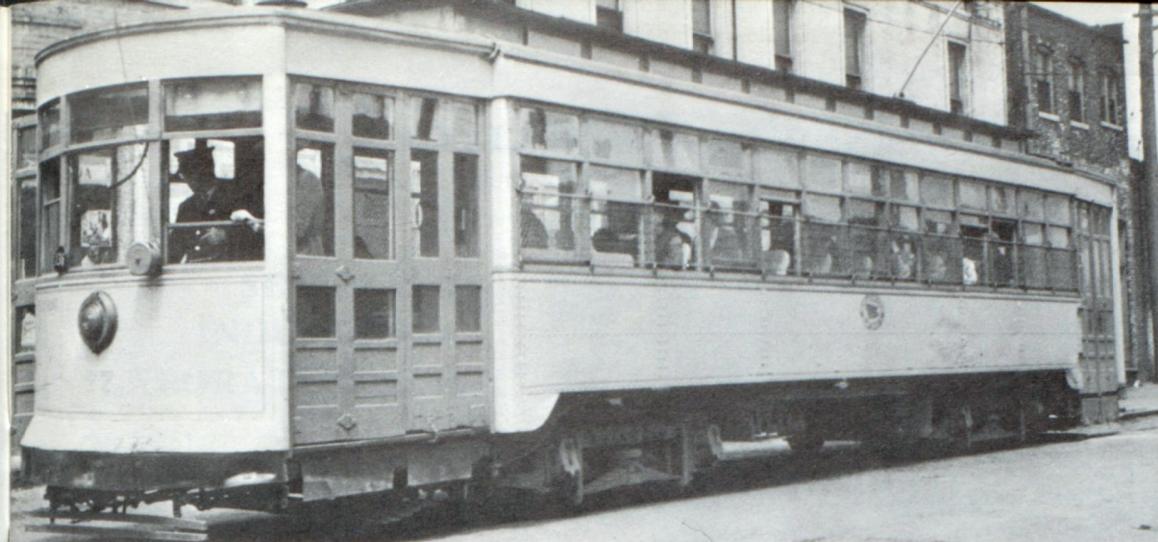

Shopping is a family affair at the Minas Company in Hammond and River Oaks Shopping Center. Here you will find a never-ending variety of Fashions, Gifts, and Home Needs.

For over 80 years the Edward C. Minas Company has been a vital part of Hammond and surrounding areas. Established in 1890, it has grown from a small hardware store to two thriving department stores and a parking garage large enough to accommodate 562 cars.

We hope that we have the privilege of serving the people of this area for another 80 years.

Hustle and Muscle.. the dynamic tradition

Unlike many other American towns that were emerging as entities at about the middle of the 19th century, Hammond never experienced a period during its history that could be described as somnolent. It was on the go from the start; it seems always to have been a town with a lusty, driving vigor, a place where people made things happen, starting with the advent of Ernst Hohman and his bride in 1851. The Hohmans, fleeing a Chicago cholera epidemic, found state-owned land selling at the rate of $1.25 an acre in this last portion of Indiana to be settled. For $262.50 they acquired land on the Grand Calumet River opposite an Indian burial ground. The entire area was little more than a succession of swamps and sandhills, but the Hohman land straddled the stage route from Detroit to Chicago, and the Hohmans — with the erection of a log hostelry — became innkeepers. (Among their more distinguished guests was presidential candidate Stephen A. Douglas.)

Around the inn grew the village of Hohmanville. In time the young German immigrant increased his landhold to 700 acres.

George H. Hammond, Detroit butcher, having innovated the successful use of refrigerated railway cars for shipping dressed beef long distances, acquired 80 of the Hohman acres in 1869 and gave the town its first industry when he established the State Line Slaughterhouse. The name of the village was switched to Hammond, the story goes, on the toss of a coin.

An important aspect of George Hammond's business practice was to hold down shipping costs for his beef by pitting competitive rail lines against each other, and the number of lines within the city multiplied as the meat-packing business — and with it the population — boomed.

In accordance with his policy of keeping the railroads running scared, Hammond was dead set against the idea of a permanent settlement; his preference was to maintain an atmosphere of transience to put teeth into his threat to the railroads to move his business if shipping costs got out of line. Against his wishes, however, Hammond was incorporated as a village in 1883, and as a city of 5000 one year later.

Disaster removed Hammond from domination by a single industry in 1901 when a half-million-dollar fiery holocaust gutted the slaughterhouse, destroying 5000 hapless beef cattle in the process. When the plant was rebuilt two years later, the site was shifted to the Chicago stockyards, and for the first time Hammond found itself in desperate economic straits. With a resolve tinted by a "never again" determination, civic leaders mapped out a program to attract diversified industry in the city that never has stopped. Its success is demonstrated today by Hammond's more than 200 manufacturers and the vast range of products they turn out.

A part of Hammond's tradition of hustling achievement is its claim to having produced the nation's first professional football team and the first automatic potato harvester. Among its better-known citizens: jeweler A.C. Roebuck, who formed a Chicago mail-order house with partner Richard Sears.

From the start Hammond has been a city of vigorous overachievers. It still is.

LEVER BROTHERS COMPANY

Hammond Plant

Located on a 26-acre tract that was once an amusement park, the Hammond Plant of Lever Brothers Company is that city's largest manufacturing facility and the largest of Lever's six plants in the United States.

It produces 19 consumer products—liquid and powder detergents, toilet soaps, margarines, and other food products—and a comparable line of products for industrial and institutional use. From the huge plant warehouse, which stretches over two blocks along Indianapolis Boulevard, the entire Lever product line of household and personal products is shipped to consumers in 28 states.

The Lever plant is also Hammond's largest employer. Its original five buildings were opened in 1930 with 250 employees. Today, 1300 men and women work in the 17 buildings that make up the manufacturing complex. Of these, 30 percent have been with the company for more than 25 years and 76 percent for more than 10 years.

The Place to call Home

As a residential community, Hammond projects the kind of comfortable, gracious atmosphere that seems to make people want to put down roots. A great many have, and the result is a stable, orderly city of handsome homes on peaceful, treelined streets where privacy and neighborliness are in proper proportion.

Blessed by a fortuitous location, Hammond offers a residential refuge amid the heavily industrialized cities along the southwestern tip of Lake Michigan. The pride of ownership of those who have sought it out shows clearly in sparkling homes and carefully tended lawns. This characteristic, expanded, contributes significantly to the spirit of continuing community improvement that is one of the city's chief attributes.

A majority of residents own their homes. A good balance is struck, however, in availability between homes and rental units; a generous part of the housing mix consists of attractive modern apartments for those who choose this option.

Homes are available in most sections of the city in a gratifying variety of styles and a wide range of prices. In general, costs are competitive for the area. A factor of reassurance is that the many elements that make Hammond a strong, healthy city can be expected to produce a consistent long-term increase in property values.

A new senior citizens' housing unit provides attractive, convenient living at moderate cost to the aging and is evidence of the concern manifested within the community for the well-being of all its citizens.

Education by Innovation

Can private educational firms under performance contracts increase student achievement in certain subjects at a reasonable cost?

Can the public schools' relationships with minority groups be improved sufficiently to remove barriers that hinder minority-group education?

Can management-improvement techniques used in business be employed in the schools to teach leadership and organizational improvement, and to better interpersonal relationships?

Answers to these questions are being sought in Hammond's public school system through trail-blazing programs for which federal economic support has been gained under the leadership of Dr. Robert L. Medcalf, Superintendent of Schools. Results could change patterns in public education on a national scale.

Performance contracting was a one-year experimental effort, the results of which currently are being evaluated. The project involved hiring a private educational firm to teach reading and math to 600 pupils in grades one to three and seven to nine. Prizes were used as learning incentives. Under terms of the contract, each pupil's achievement in the two courses must be improved by one full grade or the firm receives no pay for that student. Funded through the federal Office of Economic Opportunity, the Hammond program was one of only 18 undertaken in the United States.

Another federally funded program brought to the city under Dr. Medcalf's influence deals with minority-group relationships within the school system. Essentially its aims are to give teachers and administrators in-service training in dealing with learning problems peculiar to minority groups, and to change school policies and practices found to be blocking these groups' educational achievement.

Still another exemplary program is one conducted in conjunction with the University of Chicago's Industrial Relations Center that features the teaching of management-improvement techniques common to private business and industry. It could result, according to Dr. Medcalf, in a complete overhaul of the system's curricula and administrative functions.

Fifth-largest public-school system in Indiana, Hammond has 23,000 students enrolled in 27 schools, with more additions or new construction in progress. The school system, with a staff of 1900, also ranks as Hammond's largest employer.

The city has nine parochial elementary schools and one high school. The highly rated Catholic school system provides a complete educational program terminating in Noll Central High School, which serves much of the Calumet area.

The Purdue
Pipers in action

Calumet Campus Administration Building

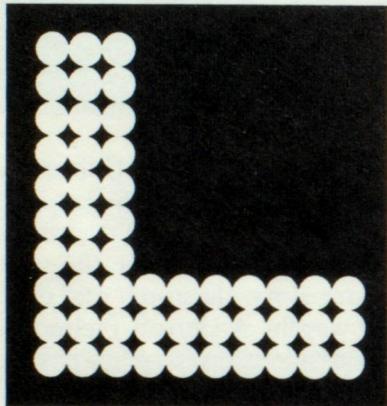

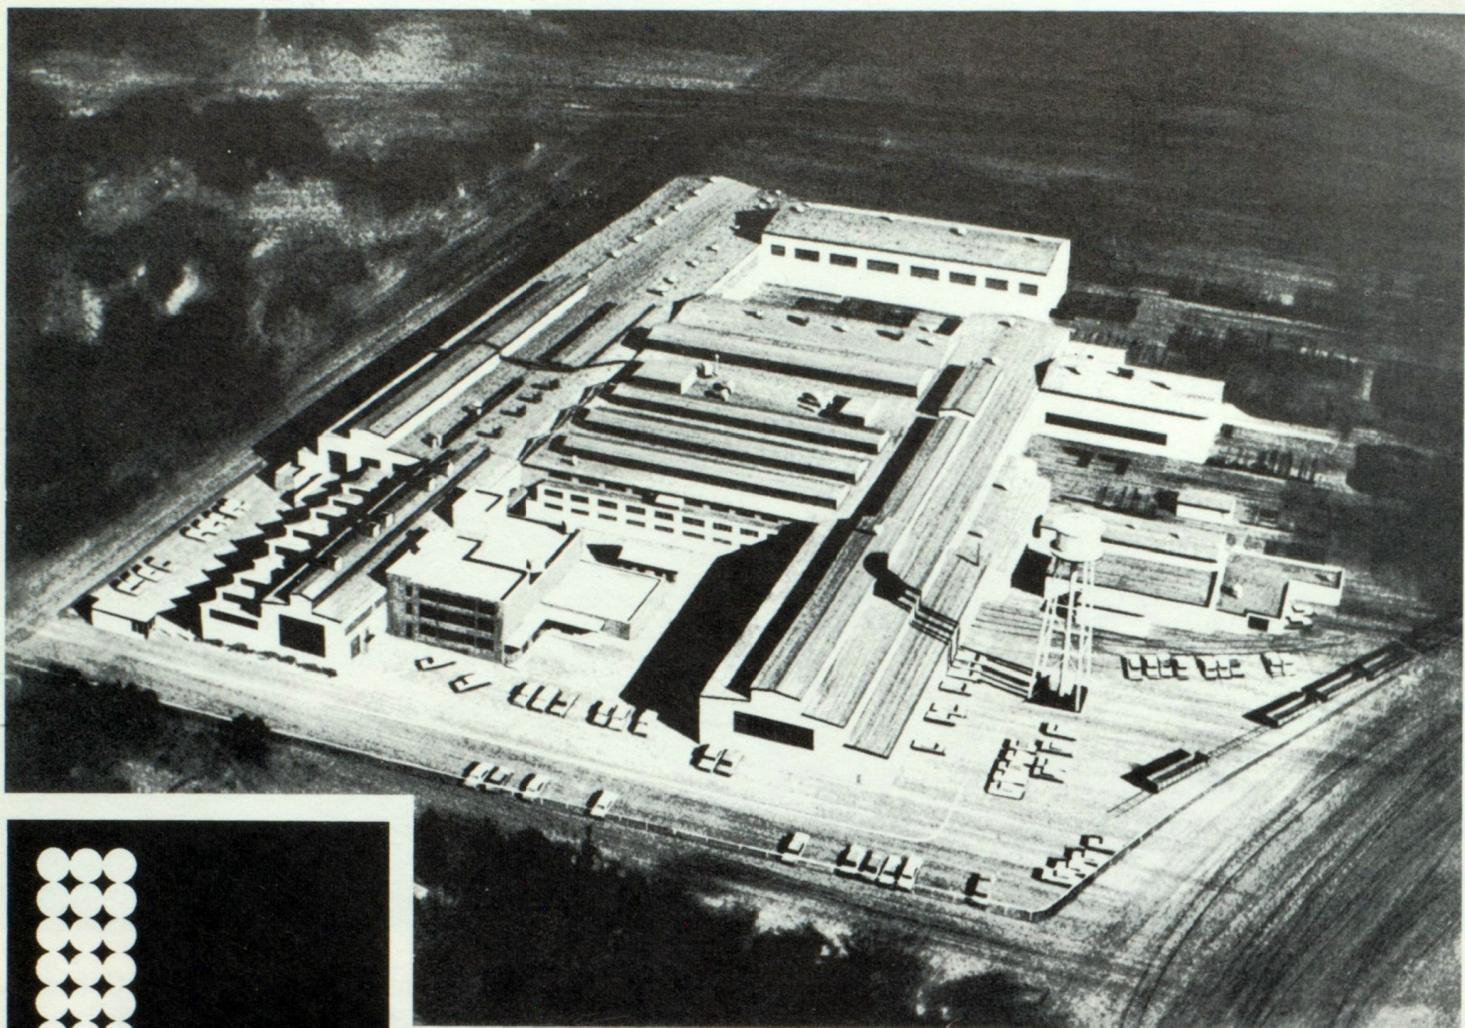

Just south of the main building of Purdue University's Calumet Campus stands a new $6.2-million Student-Faculty and Library Center. On the north campus is the new Electrical Building. Scheduled for the south campus is a $3.2-million, three-story classroom and office building. Dedicated in 1969 was the Anderson Technology Laboratories building. These additions to the physical plant are only the most dramatic and readily apparent symbols of Purdue Calumet's growth, and they are matched by a steadily increasing number of students and an expanding curriculum.

Occupying a 167-acre site in Hammond's Woodmar section, Purdue Calumet in little more than a decade has acquired an enrollment of more than 5200 students, most of whom are working toward completing their education while holding full-time jobs.

Purdue is part of the nation's 68 land-grant colleges and universities and traditionally has offered courses in agriculture and engineering. Today, however, the student's choice is broadened to include instruction in seven other schools. Several new bachelor-degree programs bring to about 35 the number of majors available on the Calumet campus. In addition, there are 11 different curricula in the two-year associate-degree programs. A variety of graduate programs is available for students working toward master's and other advanced degrees in education, engineering, industrial management, and related specialties.

Purdue Calumet's prestige has been enhanced further by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, which awarded the institution operationally separate accreditation within the Purdue system. This action attests to the quality of the faculty and staff, excellence of courses and curricula, and the adequacy of facilities in achieving the goals of the institution.

...this is the mark of progress, quality and service in cold-finished steel bars

This trademark is familiar to many Hammond residents, but is even better known to America's foremost manufacturing concerns. It identifies La Salle Steel Company, a leading producer of cold-finished steel bars used for making parts for automobiles, farm and construction equipment, home appliances, industrial machinery and many other products.

More than just a producer, La Salle is a developer of entirely new types of steel bars. These are marketed under various trade names. Perhaps the best known is STRESSPROOF®, a high strength, easily machined steel bar that requires no heat treatment. Other La Salle steels of this type include FATIGUE-PROOF®, "e.t.d." 150® and "e.t.d." 180®. Another special La Salle steel bar is LA-LED® X—an extremely fast-machining material which has helped many customers set new production records.

In addition, La Salle manufactures a complete line of standard cold-drawn steel bar products in various shapes and sizes produced to the customers' specifications.

La Salle has played an active role in the economic growth of Hammond. The company was founded in 1912, in Chicago, and built the nucleus of its present plant on the eastern edge of Hammond in 1920.

When La Salle first began producing cold-finished steel bars, the metalworking industry was relatively unsophisticated. La Salle customers usually ordered, simply, "hard steel" or "soft steel." As industry grew, new production methods were introduced and better materials became necessary. La Salle kept pace with the growth of its customers, providing bar steels to help them lower selling prices and broaden their markets.

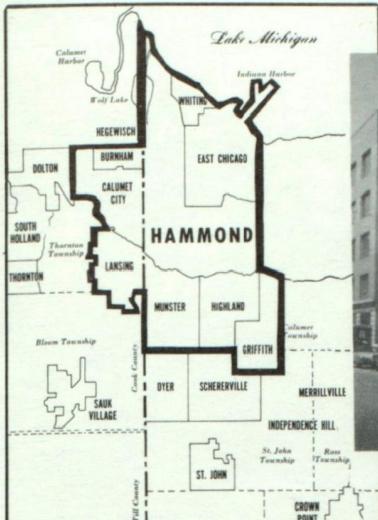

But product improvement is a long-term effort—changes had to be made step-by-step. And many steel innovations were made by La Salle as a result of efforts to solve specific customer problems.

The company has seen years of prosperity and periods of rough times. The steel business has its ups and downs, but La Salle's record over more than half a century has been one of continuous, sound growth.

This stability partly explains why so many persons, employed in La Salle's early years in Hammond, have spent the rest of their business lives with the company. And, as in any company where people are held in high regard, La Salle still maintains a high percentage of "long-timers" in its fold. For example, of La Salle's 614 permanent employees, more than half (312) have been with the company ten years or more.

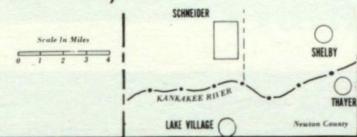

For success, La Salle has found no substitutes for product quality... and for service to its people, community and customers. La Salle Steel Company, 1412 150th Street, WEstmore 2-6090.

Since The Times is the only daily newspaper read by the great majority of Calumet Region people, it bears the great responsibility of presenting a balanced proportion of news and maintaining high standards as a family newspaper of general interest. Because of its policy of constantly improving its facilities and its latest electronic equipment and computers, it is one of the most modern newspaper publishing plants in the Midwest. It has been the recipient of many awards for outstanding news and pictorial coverage, along with typographical excellence. A strong emphasis is placed on general local news, along with state, national and world news as provided by AP and UPI, a host of representative features and columnists, and comics for young and old. Its large volume of display and classified advertising is greater than that of many metropolitan newspapers, as further testimony to the role of The Times in serving the needs of its readers and advertisers in The Calumet.

BRIAR EAST INDUSTRIAL PARK

Looking for a new place to locate your business? Briar East is northern Indiana's most prestigious industrial park. There are prime sites for sale or leaseback from one-half to four acres. Brokers protected.

FLEUR DE LIS APARTMENTS

Built on the shores of a tranquil lake, this village of French-style apartments is northern Indiana's largest recreational community. Briar East has one-, two-, and three-bedroom apartments that feature central air conditioning, patios and balconies, and Westinghouse appliances including garbage disposal and dishwasher and wall-to-wall carpeting. Recreational facilities include the Briar East clubhouse with cardroom, two billiard rooms, TV room, ballroom, and children's playground and swimming pool. Shopping and restaurants are located on the premises.

BRIAR EAST SHOPPING CENTER

Fun City, Hammond Style

Fun in Hammond knows no closed season. The city sees to it. Planned year-round programs in the giant Civic Center, for example, range from dog-obedience training to instruction in karate, all under the expert eye of a full-time recreation director.

At the heart of Hammond's recreational resources are the more than 1000 acres of parkland in 32 units maintained by the Park Board. In these, too, is offered a comprehensive program of planned activities supervised by the staff of the Park and Recreation Department. Since 1946, when planned recreational programs were inaugurated, the number and types of activities available to all members of the community have proliferated, keeping pace with the requirements of growth.

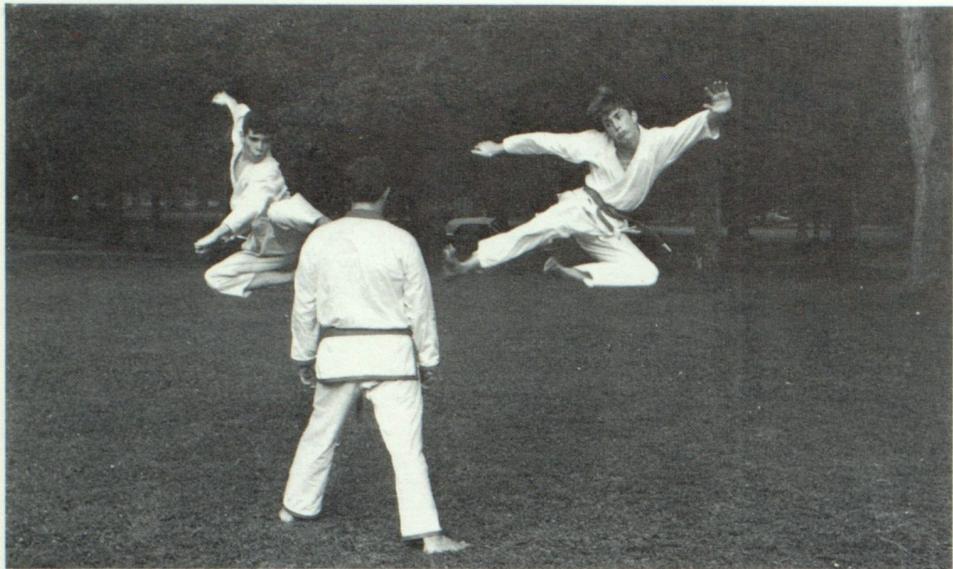

Within the park system are 19 hard-surfaced tennis courts, 20 softball diamonds, 22 ice-skating areas (10 with warming houses), and 15 baseball diamonds. (Last season 117 Little League baseball games were played on the Miller School diamond.) Attendance at 18 playgrounds has reached an annual total of over 165,000 admissions. The number of teams in the Hammond Ladies Recreational Volleyball League grew from 10 to 18 last year; a round-robin tournament is a well-attended annual event. Sponsored uniformed athletic teams number more than 100.

The 410 acres of Wolf Lake and its beaches are a mecca for those to whom summer fun means water sports. They offer unlimited opportunities for boating, fishing, and swimming, and have provided an arena for state water-ski meets on several occasions. Despite its popularity the lake still affords an air of seclusion and tranquillity that many find revitalizing.

Outdoor enthusiasts in the area range all the way from Chicago's inviting forest preserves on the west to the fabled sandhills of the Indiana Dunes State Park and adjacent National Park on the east — and can be found aboard various types of pleasure boats on Lake Michigan in between.

Rounding out the local attractions are seven bowling alleys, four theaters, nearby golf courses, and numerous high-school and college spectator sports.

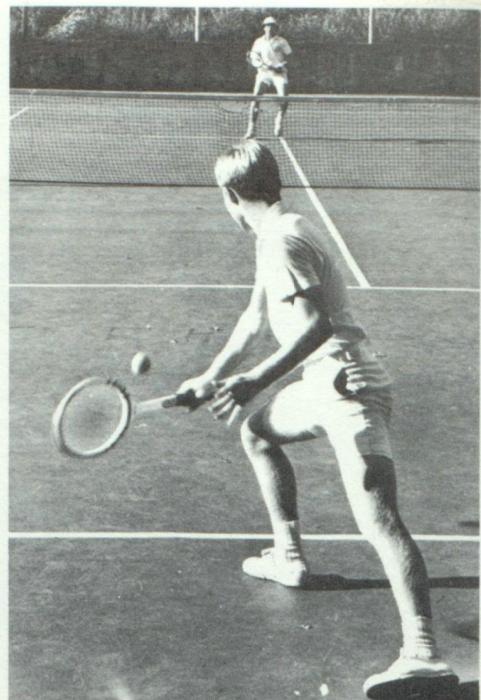

For those who seek the variegated appeals of the metropolis, they're all waiting in Chicago — professional sports, name entertainers, great restaurants — within a half hour's drive.

Your job starts ahead and stays ahead when you do business with us

Throughout the Calumet area, industrial and business management, contractors, and municipalities know Vic Kirsch companies mean service, reliability, and satisfaction—in any job that involves industrial or municipal construction, heavy-equipment rental, and special-permit or other types of heavy hauling. Among the many resources Vic Kirsch puts against every job are the largest, most diversified inventory of heavy equipment in the Midwest, professional engineers, on-the-job supervisors, and top-rated operators. And the Vic Kirsch reputation rides with every piece of equipment. Results are measured in job satisfaction, time and money saved, and peace of mind. On these pages are some of the reasons why it pays to do business with Vic Kirsch companies.

All development work for Briar East, ultramodern Hammond apartment complex with a projected 1,000 units, was done by the Construction Division: major excavation, which included building a three-acre lake; street and road construction; sewer installation; and underground work for the buildings themselves.

In use at the job site is a pipe-leak detection and grouting system which goes where men can't. Of advanced design, the system utilizes closed-circuit television for the location and repair of leaks in all types of underground pipe with maximum speed and economy.

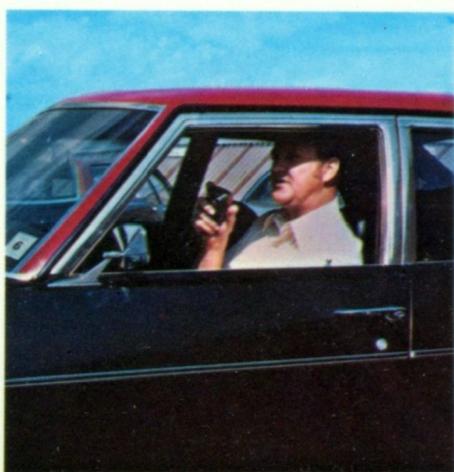

The Construction Division achieves the pinpoint accuracy required for grade and line installations both under and above ground with this laser-beam leveling system, another example of how technological innovations are employed to achieve speed, accuracy, economy, and job satisfaction.

Cranes supplied by the Equipment Rental Division are used to install a flare stack and derrick for the Number Two Sulfur Recovery Unit at the American Oil refinery in Whiting, Ind. In use: a 150-ton Manitowoc 4000-W Viccon crawler crane with 300 feet of boom; a 100-ton Manitowoc 3900-B crawler with 180 feet of boom; and a 50-ton Lima crawler with 100 feet of boom. Other cranes are available in sizes to meet any job requirements, part of the massive inventory of heavy equipment for rental by the hour, day, week, or month, fully serviced and maintained and rented either with the most expert operators available, or bare.

At a company-owned sand pit, Hendrickson tri-axle dump trucks with a capacity of 18 cubic yards each are loaded by 275 Michigan front-end loaders. Stone, slag, and black dirt for all types of construction are also available from company-owned sources of supply, and are sped directly from source to job site.

Two-way radio communications are maintained to eliminate misunderstandings, delays, and added costs. Here a dispatcher at base—control headquarters—relays direction to a supervisor at the job site. All lead trucks in use are radio-equipped, another element of the service and satisfaction Vic Kirsch companies provide for customers.

Maintenance and repair shop for heavy equipment, one of two fully staffed, fully equipped facilities that keep machines rolling. Mobile units, dispatched directly to the job site as needed, effect minor repairs in the field, minimizing downtime and increasing overall efficiency.

Fifteen-cubic-yard Michigan 210 scraper being loaded by a Caterpillar D-8 bulldozer at the site of the Lake County government complex being constructed in Crown Point, Ind. The Equipment Rental Division makes these and other pieces of dirt equipment available for any type of construction project, rented either fully maintained and operated, or bare.

A Hendrickson tractor pulls a 35-ton, three-axle lowboy loaded with a section of a heavy-duty industrial dust collector, one example of the specialized work done by the Heavy Hauling Division. By authority of the I.C.C. the company provides service to 48 states and Canada through the Red Book interchange. In addition, the company operates on its own four-state I.C.C. authority in Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and Indiana.

Meetings of top management and supervisory personnel are held every Saturday morning to discuss current projects, to review problems and opportunities of the immediate future, and to examine long-range plans, policies, and programs. Such company-wide sessions have a single overall objective: to see that customers are provided the highest possible quality of service.

Hammond Public Library

Arts and Letters and then some

A bright orange door at 5448 Hohman Avenue opens onto a lively world of art education and appreciation for Hammond area residents. Establishment of the Art Center of the Northern Indiana Art Association in permanent quarters was a cultural milestone for the city.

Dedicated in 1970, the Art Center occupies a vacated Greek Revival church building that dates from 1892 and is designated a historical landmark by the Hammond Historical Society. Acquired and renovated by the association, the structure provides ample space for expanded association functions.

Throughout the year, changing exhibits of art in all media hang in the gallery. The public is welcome, as are school groups and Scout troops. Several area organizations use the attractive facility as a regular meeting place. Classes in various facets of art are offered under professional instructors, and lectures are conducted by qualified teachers of art history. Future plans include granting of art scholarships, additions to the permanent collection, acquisition of sculpture for a Sculpture Garden, an extended schedule of lectures and slide programs, and the addition of a professional director.

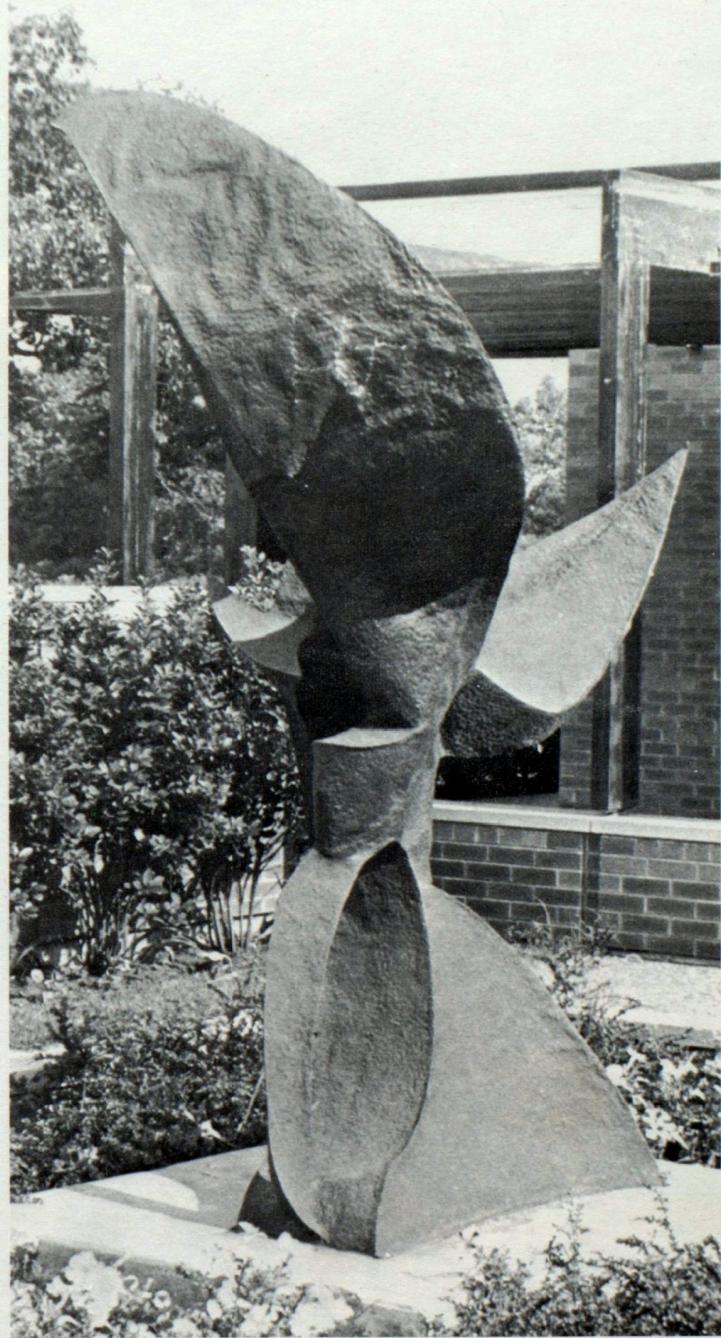

Another downtown cultural landmark is the handsome main building of the Hammond Public Library. Classical in design and contemporary in spirit, the $1.8-million structure of Indiana limestone was planned to house an ultimate 400,000 volumes on three functional levels, all fully air conditioned both for comfort and for the preservation of library materials. The main library and its 11 branches circulate about a million books a year. Other materials available include magazines, newspapers, magnetic tapes, maps, and music scores. For readers with some impairment of vision, a selection of more than 250 titles printed in large, easy-to-read type may be drawn upon.

As an additional service to the community the library makes its meeting rooms available for civic and cultural gatherings. Throughout the year a variety of special exhibits are on display, primarily in the realm of fine arts but some of exceptional general interest: the moon rocks, for example, which, with the cooperation of NASA, were on-view in Hammond even before they could be seen in Chicago. A large collection of regional historical material, housed in the Calumet Room, is constantly being augmented and is a primary source for historical researchers studying northwest Indiana. This is sponsored by the Hammond Historical Society, a lively local group with its own Newsletter and a 12-year record of steady membership growth. It also has sponsored several publications of local historical importance.

Now in its third decade, the Hammond Community

Concert Association brings to the city a number of outstanding musical presentations each year.

All major civic and fraternal organizations have chapters in Hammond, and most of these sponsor cultural offerings for their members. An active amateur theatrical company, the Civic Little Theater, is sponsored by the Recreation Department and supported solidly by members of the community.

BRANT CONSTRUCTION COMPANY

Capabilities is more than just a word to the experts at Brant Construction Company. To this well-known general contractor, reliability, quality, versatility, and performance are part of the total concept.

Through the years, Brant has enjoyed a strong growth—both in number and in scope of projects undertaken—because of its guiding principle: strict insistence upon quality.

Its divisions—Industrial, Metal Buildings, Institutional/Commercial, and Residential—involve the company in every type of light and heavy construction. The firm recently completed the Hammond Central Fire Station and Turner Park Elderly and Family Housing Project.

The Industrial Division is diversified with completed jobs totaling millions of square feet for buildings in steel mills, refineries, chemical, processing, and manufacturing plants.

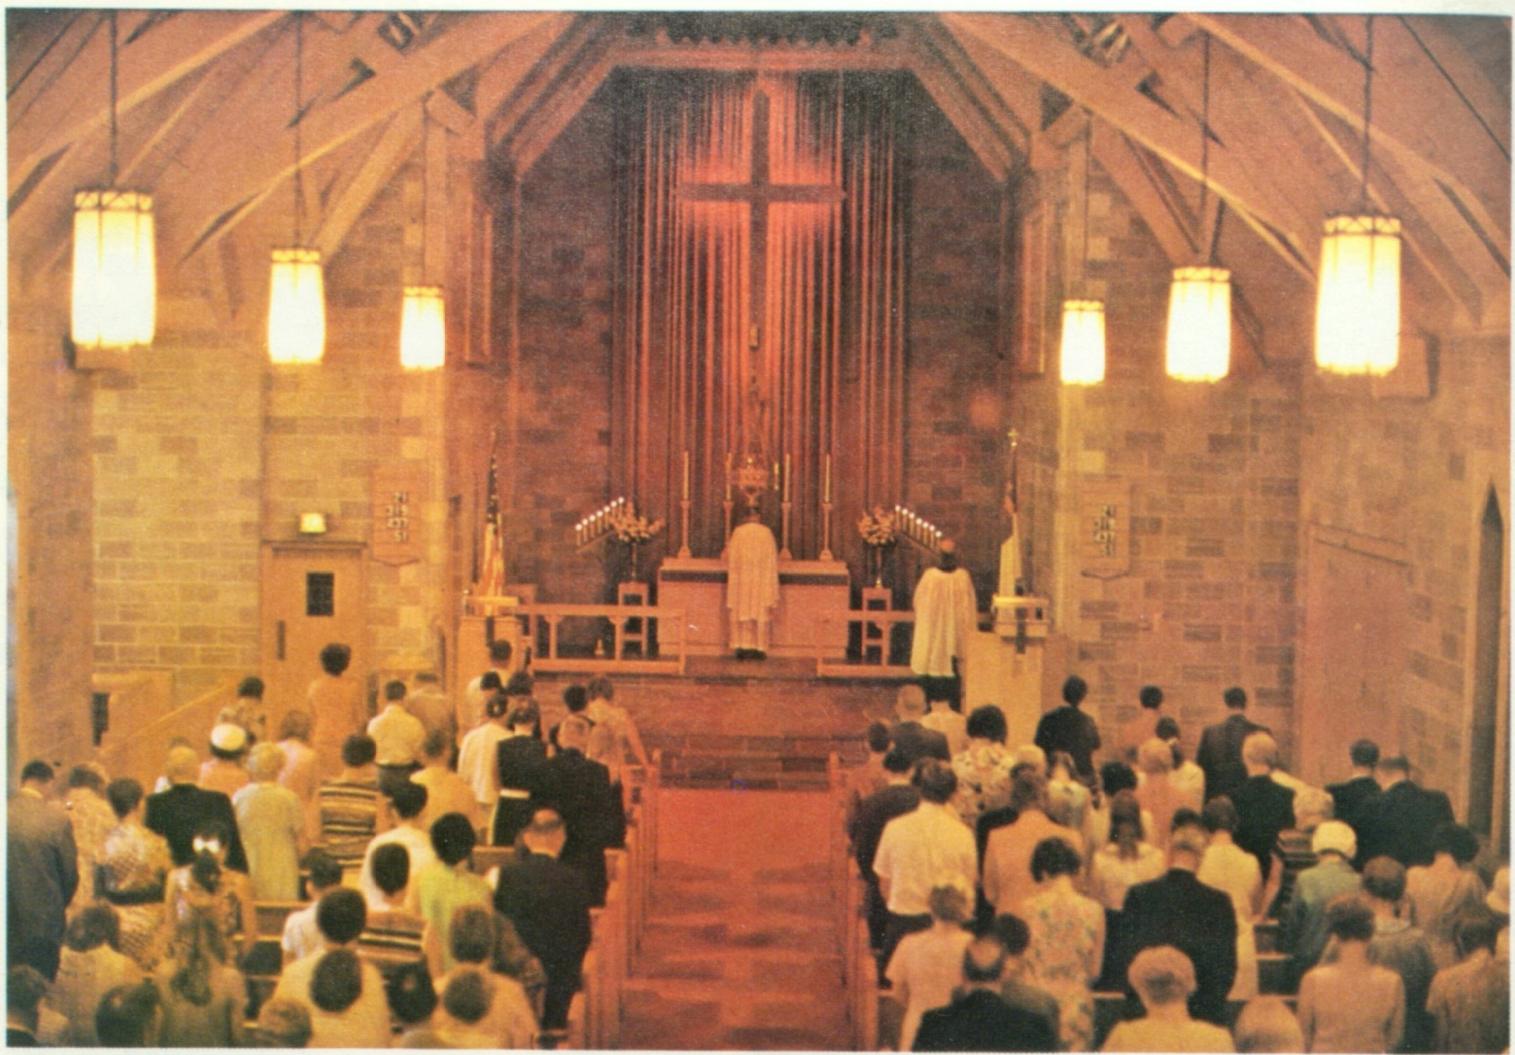

The Total Design/Built concept applies from design and organization through turn-key completion and beyond, through contract maintenance.

Any remaining doomsayers who postulate the demise of the Deity will find cold comfort in Hammond. Here the rewards of the spiritual life are pursued with a zestful energy that places its positive stamp on the character of the community.

A case in point is the venerable First Baptist Church, one of the world's largest. At a time when the national trend shows a drift of downtown churches to the suburbs, First Baptist continues to acquire property, expand its ministry, and multiply its membership. The church's annual operating budget exceeds $1 million. It owns the world's largest fleet of church buses, 190. It owns and operates elementary, junior high, and high schools, and a four-year college is imminent. First Baptist's 14,000 members utilize facilities valued at upwards of $4 million. With a full-time staff of over 50, the church accommodates an average Sunday School attendance of 5000 persons every week. It also operates the Hammond City Rescue Mission.

Founded in 1887 with 12 members, the First Baptist Church has been under the dynamic leadership of Dr. Jack Hyles, pastor, since 1949. Author of 16 books with combined sales of over a million copies, Dr. Hyles travels extensively, speaking before diverse groups from coast to coast and around the world.

Hammond's residents are served also by 71 other houses of worship. Among them are 49 Protestant churches, nine Catholic churches, and two synagogues. These edifices are beautifully maintained and landscaped; they combine to create a spiritual atmosphere that is warm, friendly, and inspiring.

HAMMOND PARKING CORP.

Twenty Hammond merchants and property owners organized the Hammond Parking Corporation in 1952 to furnish good parking facilities at reasonable rates in the Downtown area. The Corporation operates several parking lots totaling over 700 parking stalls including the Russell Auto Park at 225 Russell and 440 Fayette Streets.

Most Hammond merchants, banks, and professional people provide free parking in the lots for their customers by validating the claim checks.

A Healthy Outlook

Where speed is essential and problems complex, St. Margaret's Hospital turns to the computer

Saint Margaret Hospital, founded in 1898, is a fully accredited, completely modern general hospital with a capacity of 550 beds. The importance of the contribution it makes to the overall welfare of the community would be difficult to exaggerate.

The medical staff, including consultants, totals 180 physicians and surgeons representing most major specialties. Nearly 250 nurses are in attendance. With more than 1200 employees, Saint Margaret is the second-largest employer in Hammond and maintains an annual payroll of over $6 million.

Services of the hospital have been expanded constantly to meet the health-care needs of the community. A recent addition to the Nuclear Medicine Department is a scanner that has reduced the exposure time for patients to 25 percent of that originally required. With the opening of a new Radiology Department, there has been a steady increase in the number of sophisticated procedures. Saint Margaret maintains one of the few renal-dialysis units in the state; treatment involves use of an artificial-kidney machine.

The community offers its services through the Saint Margaret Hospital Guild, with 130 of its members serving as volunteers. During the past year a total of 30,574 volunteer hours were served in carrying out a variety of projects.

The hospital is keenly aware of the critical need for additional personnel in the field of health care and consequently has established schools for training young people for promising careers in several areas. In these efforts Saint Margaret is affiliated with the Indiana University School of Medicine for a medical education program, and with the Purdue University Calumet Campus for training nursing students. The hospital also maintains a school for certified technicians in inhalation therapy, one of the first in Indiana.

Others include a school for technologists in medical records, a school of medical technology that offers the training facilities of an all-new clinical laboratory, and a school of radiologic technology, the latter in affiliation with Indiana University.

Fine hands at the Helm

In the end the people are responsible for the way Hammond is run: government is after the mayor-city council model, with the mayor as chief executive and a legislative body of nine councilmen, all of whom are elected to serve four-year terms. Three members of the council are councilmen-at-large. Six municipal boards for areas of interest including health and safety are appointed by the mayor; membership of library, school, and sanitary boards are selected wholly or in part by the voters.

Over the past decade more than $13 million has been spent as part of a widespread improvement program for sanitation and storm sewer systems to give full service to newer sections and to correct physical and functional inadequacies in older ones. During the same period, extensive programs of street lighting, surfacing, and widening have been carried out.

One of the city's proudest achievements has been the steady expansion and improvement of the public school system to meet the needs of a growing student population.

Hammond's 159-man police department has been cited for its effective traffic-safety campaigns. The efficacy of the 161-man fire department is indicated by the fact that for several years fire loss in Hammond has been the lowest in the United States among cities of comparable size.

More than 60 years of crisp, comprehensive news coverage of events important to citizens of the Calumet Region and northwestern Indiana has earned the Hammond Times a large and loyal following. Published daily except Saturday, this lively and informative newspaper is read by four out of five of the area's residents.

The Chicago Tribune features news of the region in a weekly section devoted to northwest Indiana. Two weekly newspapers are published in Hammond: the Lake County Globe Ledger, with emphasis given to local news and legal notices, and the Hessville-Woodmar Lite, which specializes in shopping and neighborhood news.

Hammond has two radio stations, WJOB AM and FM and WYCA-FM, broadcasting a varied program of sports, news, and music. The city's location near the Chicago metropolitan region assures residents fine reception of all major network television outlets.

STANRAY PRODUCTS

division of STANRAY CORPORATION

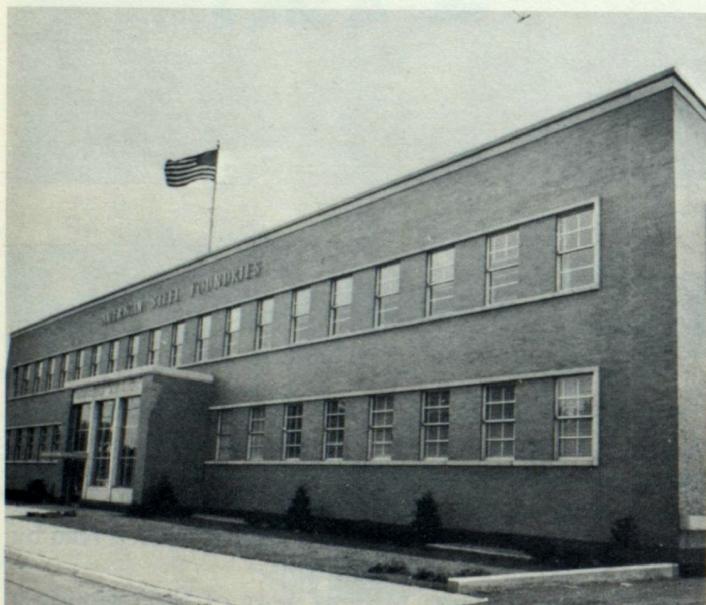

STANRAY PRODUCTS division, the operating arm of Standard Railway Equipment Group of Stanray Corporation, has one of the most flexible metal fabricating plants in the United States. It is one of the largest producers of metal roofs, ends, and other specialties for the freight-car industry.

For more than 80 years—from the days of the creaky, tar-paper-covered, 36-foot wooden boxcars to the modern 86-foot all-steel, damage-free specialized freight cars—STANRAY PRODUCTS has been a dominant factor in the railway-equipment business.

STANRAY PRODUCTS has not only kept pace and grown in its traditional railway-equipment field, but has been developing new product lines compatible with its facilities.

Easy access to Goods and Services

Looking for that certain something in the downtown shopping area

Change, while not sudden enough to be jarring, is nevertheless a constant in the downtown Hammond retailing scene. A former resident, returning for a look around, would find evidence of recent progressive change in a remodeled Walgreen's, a new De Mars restaurant, a new Straube building, a new Hoosier State Bank building — signs that the city is in a state of continuous response to the needs and desires of those who regard the community as a convenient primary source of goods and services.

Hammond's centralized location gives it a retail area population four times larger than that of the city proper, one reason retail outlets can compete successfully with those of the Chicago metropolitan area in price and quality of merchandise. As a result the principal business district centering on Hohman Avenue enjoys annual retail sales in excess of $190 million.

Three banks and two savings and loan organizations make downtown Hammond a convenient source of financial services as well as shopping facilities.

Effective average buying income per household is over $10,000, highest in Indiana, which helps to assure the prosperity of a number of modern shopping centers located outside the 40 square blocks of downtown. The new Woodmar center on Indianapolis Boulevard contains 30 diversified retail shops joined by Indiana's first enclosed climate-controlled pedestrian mall. Other highly accessible retail strips are found along Kennedy Avenue, South Calumet Avenue, and South Indianapolis Boulevard.

An Industrial El Dorado

One of Hammond's most valuable land acquisitions took place just nine years after the fledgling city was incorporated. In 1893, annexation of a long narrow strip fronting on Lake Michigan gave direct, permanent pipeline access to 22,400 square miles of fresh water. One of the many resulting benefits is that Hammond offers the lowest municipal water rate in Indiana and one of the lowest in the nation, a huge advantage in attracting industry. Today a $3-million city-owned filtration plant processes nearly 10 billion gallons of water a year; and a $5-million pumping station, now handling more than 23 million gallons on an average day, has a capacity of more than three times that amount.

The contemporary economic thrust of the city was derived from adversity. The fire that ravaged George Hammond's huge meat-packing plant in 1901, and the plant's subsequent removal to Chicago put the city against the wall economically. The desperation move to attract new industry was aimed at removing forever the threat implied by a one-industry economy. Today Hammond derives its economic strength from more than 200 industries manufacturing such a prodigious variety of products that they form a veritable cross-section of the national output. This has been achieved despite the fact that the city is surrounded by the world's largest steel producers and huge oil refineries, and has some industrial giants of its own.

Rand McNally and Company chose Hammond as the site of the largest printing plant anywhere under one roof. American Steel Foundries, Inc., keeps hundreds of employees busy turning out steel forgings, springs, and brakes for the railroads. Stratojac clothing, internation-known, is manufactured in Hammond. A huge Lever Brothers plant produces familiar brands of soaps, dentifrices, and detergents. The roster of manufacturers includes such firms as American Can, American Oil, Allied Structural Steel, Beatrice Foods, General Electric, Jones & Laughlin Steel, Shell Oil, and Simmons Mattress. Mobil Oil has completed costly new facilities. And after years of inactivity, Pullman-Standard is again manufacturing railway cars in its Hammond plant.

Of the many attractions the city holds for industry, not the least is that it's a gateway to Chicago and the country's largest distribution center. Hammond stands athwart any traverse of the country via northern routes and consequently is converged upon by a massive complex of rail, highway, air, and water transport lines. Local industry is served by virtually every major trucking firm, by 10 mainline railroads, and by two transcontinental bus lines. (In these times of drastic change in rail-passenger handling, it is interesting to note that Hammond can point to service by the last electric interurban railway line in the United States, the Chicago South Shore and South Bend, with as many as 24 trains daily.)

Chicago's Midway and O'Hare International airports are only an hour away via the Indiana Tollway and Chicago expressways. Corporate aircraft use Gary Municipal Airport, 10 minutes from downtown.

The St. Lawrence Seaway terminates at nearby Indiana Harbor, giving Hammond access to direct foreign trade. The Great Lakes dock terminal also maintains a shipping point in this harbor. Lake Calumet, one of the world's largest still-water harbors, will ultimately be connected by the Calumet-Sag Channel with the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico.

Northern Indiana Public Service Company, headquartered in Hammond, supplies the city with natural gas and abundant electricity, the latter from one of the world's largest steam-generating plants, at rates as low as can be found in any large industrial complex.

Not to be discounted as attributes are the quality of the Hammond residential community, a stable political climate, proximity afforded to materials and markets, and a fine public school system. A broad-based labor force — continually strengthened by people anxious to settle in the area and by graduates of the Technical Vocational High School — is another strong point.

With so many advantages in its favor, Hammond confidently anticipates and welcomes continued growth. One aspect of readiness is demonstrated by the existence of a private corporation formed by local banks and businessmen to aid new enterprises in locating suitable sites and obtaining financing. Industrial sites of up to 150 acres in size are also available through private sales.

A record of achievement through experience, skill, and integrity has given Tri-City Electric a top-ranked position among our nation's electrical contractors.

Now in its 61st year, Tri-City has a skilled organization devoted to the full range of electrical installations, which include the steel, chemical, and oil-refining industries as well as commercial and governmental projects.

Their work begins with concept and continues through start-up, maintenance of the system, and when advisable, updating of existing components to meet changed purposes.

Tri-City maintains complete organizations in Hammond, Chicago, Joliet, and Pittsburgh. May they add your name to their long list of satisfied customers?
